

Prehistoric Age in India

The Prehistoric Age in India holds many secrets and many stories to tell. The artifacts unearthed from these times provide fascinating insights into the era. One of the most fascinating aspects is the presence of rock art. These rock paintings can be found in many parts of India, such as in the subcontinent of South India and the Himalayan mountain regions. This rock art can be dated back to the Paleolithic age, and is estimated to be between 35,000 and 10,000 years old.

The paintings found on rocks depict various scenes of everyday life, such as hunting or gathering food. Other images show religious or spiritual figures. These paintings give us an interesting look into the lives and beliefs of the people who lived during this period. It provides a glimpse into a world long gone.

In addition to the rock art, valuable artifacts such as tools, weapons, and ornaments have also been unearthed from these prehistoric sites. These artifacts are studied by archeologists to gain an understanding of how the people of that era lived and functioned. The tools and weapons found in these sites suggest that there was a division of labor between men and women and that hunting was a major source of food. The ornaments, such as beads and pendants, suggest that they had some form of trade and exchange happening.

Overall, the Prehistoric Age in India is a fascinating topic, with much left to be discovered. With new discoveries being made every day, we may learn even more about the lives of the people of that time. Archeology is continuing to uncover new pieces of the puzzle, helping us to unravel the mysteries of this distant age.